Spy suspects planned assassinations DAYAN HEADED LIST OF VICTIMS

By YAACOV FREIDLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — Members of the alleged Arab-Jewish sabotage and espionage ring had planned to assassinate "chauvinistic" Israeli leaders with Defence Minister Moshe Dayan high on their list, it was learned yesterday.

The assassinations were scheduled to be carried out soon, but the security forces moved in last week before they could carry out their plans and arrested them.

Others marked for assassination were Israeli leaders considered by the extremist left wing members to be "especially chauvinistic." They planned to use small arms, and possibly bombs, it was learned.

Ehud Adiv, the 25-year-old former paratrooper from Gan Shmuel, is considered to have been the most dangerous of the alleged ring members. Because of his army record and his typical sabra appearance — tall, broad and light-haired — he would have experienced little difficulty in transporting arms or bombs.

He was also a familiar figure, being a member of the Mt. Carmel Hapoel basketball team, and also trained the children's team to earn his living. When he remained absent for a month at the start of the season his team managers were much distressed as he was considered a key player.

During this time he is believed to have been in Damascus and it is suspected that he passed valuable information about his paratrooper unit and army installations to the Syrians.

Like Adiv, another alleged member of the ring, Simon Haddad, 30, an Arab from Ibbin village, also studied at Haifa University, where the former teacher was taking advanced courses in English and history. Haddad never made a secret of his extremist views and was in fact dismissed from his teaching post in a Galilee village because of them. He was only last month appointed as coordinator of Arab affairs in the University's Students Union.

Chinese kill Soviet troops

MOSCOW (AP). — Russia's border dispute with China erupted in a fierce gun battle last month when five Soviet soldiers and several Russian civilians were killed in a clash with Chinese marauders who crossed into Soviet Kazakhstan, according to a confidential account quoted by Western diplomatic sources here yesterday.

The incident, which could not be officially confirmed, was the first report of bloodshed on the Sino-Soviet frontier since the full-scale tank and artillery battles between Russian and Chinese troops in 1969. News of the latest clash was contained in a confidential report circulated among select Soviet journalists on November 27, a few days after the fight took place, the diplomats said.

According to the report, they said frontier troops battled with a band of armed intruders that entered Soviet territory from China's Sinkiang province, attacked a group of Soviet shepherds and tried to withdraw into China.

(The Soviet Republic of Kazakhstan has a 1,300-km. border with China.)

The invaders killed five Red Army soldiers and an unknown number of shepherds before fleeing across the border with a large number of sheep, the report claimed.

It added that one Chinaman was captured, but did not disclose the number of Chinese deaths, if any, the diplomats said. They could not explain why the report did not reveal how many "shepherds" were killed.

A Kremlin protest to Peking was quickly rejected with the assertion that the marauders were bandits and no concern of the Chinese government, the report stated.

Both Russia and China have charged in the past that the frontier problems have been officially instigated and the diplomats here felt the report on the November clash indicated Moscow believed the Chinese were more than ordinary sheep rustlers.

Observers noted that on November 25, two days after the report was allegedly circulated, Soviet Communist Party Chief Leonid Brezhnev, in a speech to workers at a Hungarian industrial complex, accused China of being "openly hostile" toward the Soviet Union.

Cairo Parliament blasts Sadat policy

By ANAN SAFADI
Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter

Egypt's Parliament yesterday took a stance of open revolt against the regime of President Anwar Sadat, after it had lashed out at a recent government policy statement, describing it as "unconvincing."

In a rare outburst of non-confidence, the Parliament openly challenged the statement, delivered two weeks ago by Prime Minister Aziz Sidky, especially questioning the government's claim that it had completed preparing the Egyptian nation for war. The legislators said they "were not convinced that such a plan had in fact been accomplished."

They further questioned Egypt's relations with the Soviet Union, Cairo's attitude towards the U.S. and developments in Egypt's declared merger with Libya.

Last night, the Parliament was due to conclude its debate on the policy statement.

The outburst of parliamentary criticism came first from a special committee in charge of preparing the House's reply to the government statement.

The first anti-government policy remarks were voiced on Saturday by Dr. Gamal el-Ghaili, on behalf of the House's Special Committee. The criticism was taken up yesterday by several legislators and some of his remarks were repeated by Cairo Radio in its afternoon news. Despite an evident attempt to play down the tone of the anti-government attacks, the radio indicated that the anti-government criticism involved the bulk of the $60-man house.

Many of the legislators sounded so outspoken as to indicate that they were openly seeking the downfall of the government. One of them was named as Zakaria Lutfi Goma's, believed to be a relative of former Interior Minister Sha'arawi Goma's, whom Sadat has kept in jail since his major crackdown on his political opponents led by former Vice-President Ali Sabry in May last year.

The publicity given to yesterday's debate was seen as a possible preparation for a Cabinet reshuffle, through which President Anwar Sadat may seek to salvage his position by blaming the government failures on Premier Sidky.

The parliamentary outburst comes amid the present anti-Sadat army sections. (See Egyptian — page 4.)

BIGGER THAN EXPECTED Cabinet adopts Budget of over IL20,000m.

Jerusalem Post Economic Correspondent

The Cabinet yesterday approved a 1973/74 Budget of more than IL20,000m. — bigger than expected. Discussion lasted only some 90 minutes and the vote was unanimous. Ministers expressed their gratification that adequate provision was made for education, health and social welfare, which suggests that Finance Minister Pinhas Sapir's estimates have been pruned less drastically than earlier suggested.

Housing will formally get only IL950m., about the same as this year — but outlay will be greater, at the expense of the Jewish Agency, borrowings from the banks, more bond issues by the building companies, and even some outlay at the expense of the following year's Budget in 1974/75.

A Supplementary Budget of close to IL1,000m. for terminating accounts in 1972/73, will be tabled in the Knesset on December 25. It comprises the IL300m. of "bonus" tax revenue deriving from boom conditions and price inflation, which pumped extra funds into the Knesset at existing rates.

Mr. Sapir addressed the Cabinet for three hours. He said that tax collection will be toughened, and another IL50m. will be secured by increasing deductions at source. The reference is to contractors working for the Government: tax withdrawal from their fees will be upped where possible from the present five per cent to 7.5 per cent. Also an increase may be insisted on the 25 per cent deduction at source, made on interest and dividends.

Mr. Sapir stressed the disinflationary character of his financial proposals. This year the Government is permitted to borrow IL650m. from the Bank of Israel — "but we have only used half the authorization so far," he said. The "overdraft" will be smaller next year.

The difficulty is that everything has become more expensive, abroad as well as at home. The Minister stressed that basic foodstuffs are cheaper in Israel than in other countries owing to the heavy subsidies paid, and "we may not be able to keep this up for long."

Accent in the economy remains on growth, and the Government

Tax revenue

Tax revenue was scheduled to be IL10,365m. this year, but actual receipts will be more than IL13,000m. higher, reaching IL10,700m.

Next year, they will bring in over IL12,500m. — despite a loss of IL360m. due to a proposed cut in income tax. The marginal rate of tax plus compulsory loan, reduced from 80 to 75 per cent last April, will be sliced further to 70 per cent next April.

The five per cent cut will apply all the way down the line, and will be greater still at the bottom of the scale. Thus a married man with two children will pay no tax on income up to IL600 a month, as against IL438 today. A married man with four children will be tax-free up to an income of IL800 a month.

hopes to see an expansion of 9 per cent in output next year. "Only thanks to an increase on this scale can we afford to allocate such large resources to the social services, side by side with our prohibitive expenditure on defence," he stated.

Mr. Moshe Sanbar, Governor of the Bank of Israel, struck a more pessimistic note in addressing the Cabinet. Though pleased that the Treasury is managing to cover almost all its expenses from income, he warned against inflationary pressures.

Private consumption went up by 6.5 per cent per capita in real terms this year, will soar by another 8.5 per cent in 1973. Imports will augment more than exports, which means a widened trade gap. Prices will mount at least by the same amount, or 12-13 per cent, as this year.

In order to hold these negative pressures in check, Mr. Sanbar will suggest reducing bank credit further, and recommends cutting subsidies on basic commodities and services (which will accentuate the price rise still further).

'Molotov' at Egged bus in J'lem

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter

A Molotov cocktail was thrown at an Egged bus yesterday lunchtime in Suleiman Street just outside the Rockefeller Museum in East Jerusalem. No one was hurt and there was no damage to the bus.

Last night, three Arabs, reportedly aged 16, 18 and 29, were in custody. Seventeen others who had been interrogated were released during the day.

The attackers are believed to have thrown the Molotov from over the Old City wall near the north-eastern corner, opposite the Museum. It hit the left side of the bus, No. 27, as it headed westward carrying six passengers on its regular route which links East Jerusalem with Hadassah Hospital.

The explosion caused a slight fire which was immediately extinguished by the bus driver, Meir Mizrahi and another Egged driver, Shlomo Levi. A short time later, the bus continued on its way.

Police were at the scene minutes after the blast and questioned people in the vicinity, especially inside the Old City wall. None claimed to have seen the attackers.

Police circles said last night that the sabotage attack was the first in East Jerusalem in several months. It is the first time a Molotov cocktail has been used in the area. Similar ones were used in the Jaz Strip before terror activity here was brought to a top last year.

Security officials reported to yesterday's weekly Cabinet session for some 45 minutes about the details of the intelligence and sabotage network. The Cabinet Secretary would release no details on the grounds that the item was discussed in the framework of the Cabinet Security Committee — whose deliberations are classed as official secrets.

Mark Segal reports from Tel Aviv:
Danny "The Red" Cohn-Bendit served as the catalyst during a visit to Israel in 1968 that made Ehud Adiv and Dan Vered swing into an ultra-radical group that led them finally — it is charged — to serve Israel's enemies.

This is claimed by Kibbutz Artzi and Mapam left-wing sources who have closely followed the developments inside the fringe groups to their extreme left. Speaking sorrowfully of 'Udi' Adiv, son of a founding family of prosperous Kibbutz Gan Shmuel, they charge that the turning-point came with the visit to Israel of the red-headed German Jewish professional revolutionary who was a central figure in the French students' riots of May 1968.

From Haifa, Yoel Dar reports:
The alleged sabotage and spy ring was "the largest, best-organized and most dangerous we have come up against since 1948," a senior police officer said yesterday in Nazareth. Sgan-Nitzav Nuriel Sasson was speaking to the press shortly after announcing the arrest of three more suspects at their homes in Galilee villages on Saturday night, bringing the total number of suspects detained to 21, including four Jews.

ASTRONAUTS ROCKET INTO LUNAR ORBIT

SPACE CENTRE, Houston, Texas (UPI). — Jamming on their spaceship brakes with a 6½-minute rocket blast, the Apollo-17 astronauts sped into lunar orbit yesterday marvelling at the "epic sight" of the alien world they were about to explore.

Rhene Cernan, Ronald Evans and Jack Schmitt fired the spaceship's main spacecraft engine at 9:47 p.m. Israel time behind the moon. It slowed them by 3,251 kms per hour.

The spacemen emerged from behind the moon's right-hand edge 23 minutes later, travelling 6,002 k.p.h. in a looping orbit that ranged 96 to 314 kms. above the cratered surface.

One of their first tasks was to look for the lunar canyon where Cernan and Schmitt will land this afternoon.

TEACHERS MAY STRIKE DEC. 28

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The country's two teachers organizations yesterday declared a labour dispute. This means that they may hold a warning strike on December 28.

The teachers are demanding re-grading, claiming that their pay has been regressing in comparison to that of other professionals. They ask that a teacher with a Masters degree begin work at engineers' grade C instead of grade D as is now the case. Finance Minister Pinhas Sapir has recognized the teachers' claim as "justified in principle," but has said that the Government is only willing to meet the teachers' demands in stages over the next three years.

Won't tolerate clashes, Beirut warns terrorists

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter

Lebanese Premier Sa'eb Salam said yesterday he had warned the Palestinian terrorists that his government would no longer tolerate clashes with Lebanese army troops.

In an interview with the Beirut daily "An-Nahar," Salam said he had notified the terrorist leaders of the gravity with which his government views the fighting over the weekend between Lebanese troops and the saboteurs. He said his government will no longer take up a tough line towards the terrorists.

There were no reports of clashes yesterday. The Lebanese army command announced yesterday that two women were killed and nine persons, including four soldiers, were wounded in the second day of fighting on Saturday. It said the casualties occurred when the terrorists ambushed an army vehicle and fired on three military positions in south Lebanon. Earlier, it said two soldiers and a policeman were killed and five others wounded on Friday. The terrorists admitted to five of their men being killed and several others wounded. In their recent communiqué the Lebanese army had referred to the terrorists as "armed elements" instead of the customary "commandos."

Meanwhile, the Lebanese army was yesterday reported to have established itself in several southern areas which had been banned to terrorists since the Israeli September crackdown on terrorist bases on southern Lebanon.

Beirut reports said yesterday that Fatah chief Yasser Arafat was now in Damascus negotiating the transfer of more terrorists from southern Lebanon to Syria.

Arafat's talks in Damascus coincided yesterday with a "New York Times" report from Beirut saying that Syria has ordered the terrorists to halt raids from its territory into Israel.

In a broadcast from their radio station, based in Syria's southern town of Dera'a, the terrorists yesterday complained that they were pressured by Arab regimes to lay down their arms. The radio in particular attacked the "hireling forces" in Lebanon for launching the weekend attack on the terrorists, alleging that Beirut was serving the "interests of the Zionist enemy."

The Egyptian People's Assembly last night cabled the Lebanese Parliament expressing Cairo's "concern on reports of army clashes with the commandos." The cable urged the Lebanese Parliament to seek the continuation of terrorist activity against Israel from southern Lebanon.

TUNIS (Reuter). — Libyan President Muammar al Gaddafi will pay a five-day official visit to Tunisia starting next Wednesday. It was officially announced here yesterday.

Injured P.L.O. man 'may have been making bomb'

PARIS (UPI). — The Palestine Liberation Organization's representative in France, Mahmoud el-Hamchari, was making a bomb when an explosion occurred at his Left Bank flat, the Front of Jewish Students said here yesterday.

It called on police to arrest Hamchari and "open without delay an inquiry into the activities of terrorists with the P.L.O. and the Arab League in France and put an end to their activities." It said the Front would ensure the security of the Jewish community as long as terrorists circulated freely in France.

Hamchari was seriously ill in hospital yesterday with leg injuries and second-degree burns which he received when a bomb exploded on Friday.

Police are investigating if the bomb was attached to the telephone since the explosion took place only seconds after the phone rang.

Hamchari told his French wife the caller was a person claiming to be an Italian journalist who arranged to interview him on Friday, then failed to turn up. Friends said Hamchari believed it was a ruse to get him out of the house while the bomb was planted.

Thirty Arabs ousted from Holland

AMSTERDAM (INA). — Police expelled 30 Arabs from Holland last week as part of a large-scale crackdown on illegally settled foreigners.

Twenty-five Moroccans, four Egyptians, and a Tunisian were arrested and ousted in what police announced was "only the first" of many expulsions.

According to observers here, the crackdown serves a double purpose: to alleviate growing Dutch unemployment and to weed out possible terrorists.

Two Jewish suspects in 'Revolution Alliance'

By MARK SEGAL
Jerusalem Post Political Reporter
TEL AVIV. — The paths of two of the Jews alleged to be involved in a spy ring broken up by security forces last week, Shmuel Yehoshua and Dan Vered, the former kibbutznik, and Dan Vered, the lonely intellectual son of a well-to-do Ramat Gan family, met at the fringe of Israel's political spectrum. They found themselves in "the Israel Socialist Organization" established in Jerusalem in 1962.

YA'ACOV CAROZ exposes Farago's farrago

The Bormann hoax

'Informant' denies all knowledge

NEW YORK. — The "New York Times" reported on Saturday that the man who gained worldwide fame recently as the "Argentine intelligence officer" who had tracked down Martin Bormann, says he has never seen Bormann, never, in fact, even looked for him and had no knowledge of whether he is dead or alive.

Juan Jose Velasco, who was identified as the star informant in the expose of Martin Bormann's fate researched by Ladislav Farago for the London "Daily Express" early this month, said in a series of interviews in Buenos Aires last week that the documents used by Farago were forgeries.

A week-long investigation also disclosed that the man whose pictures had been published around the world for the last two weeks, identified as Bormann, is alive and lives in Argentina. His name is Rodolfo Nicolas Siri and he is a 54-year-old high school teacher.

In a statement issued in New York yesterday, Farago said: "In view of the doubts raised by the 'New York Times' about the authenticity of the Martin Bormann documents... I will return to Buenos Aires in the near future to seek the aid of the Argentine authorities in the authentication of the documents and the clarification of this controversy. I have in my possession authoritative documents, only a small fraction of which have come to me from agent Velasco," Farago said.

(INA, Reuter)

Later in his series Farago for some reason changes the name to the "Blue Falcons," headed by a Yehuda Shimoni. No doubt whoever fabricated Farago's "documents" had remembered that press reports at the time of Eichmann's capture mentioned this as the name of one of Eichmann's captors.

The truth is that Yehuda Shimoni, then as now a senior El Al official, handled the special El Al flight arranged to bring the Israel delegation to Argentina's 150th anniversary celebrations, held at the time of the capture. Similarly, the late Dr. Fritz Bauer's known role in the discovery of Eichmann enabled the document forgers to garnish their creation with his name.

Furthermore, the Israeli task force did not carry Israeli passports, and it was impossible to identify them as Israeli citizens. Only a few of them stayed at hotels, and then only for part of their time in Argentina. And there was never more than one Israeli agent at a given hotel, so that it is hard to see how they could have made themselves conspicuous. As to the Israeli task force which the "secret dossier" has visiting Argentina in 1957, this in truth amounted to one man, whose sole task was to check out what proved to be a false lead. And this 1957 mission was openly reported later.

Even Farago's description of the capture is incorrect. Whoever made up his documents simply did not know how it was done. They were unaware that there were two cars on the spot, not one, and that the cars were standing, not moving. After the capture Eichman was taken not to a farm, but to another sort of place. The plane bearing him took off not at 5:52 p.m. but at five minutes after midnight on the next day, May 31, 1960. Neither Abba Eban nor Meir Zorea were on board; both had come to Buenos Aires on the El Al plane, but they returned to Israel by other means.

Incidentally, Abba Eban was at the time not Foreign Minister but Minister of Education. This mistake in Farago's "secret dossier" indicates that it could not have been fabricated before the spring of 1966, when Mr. Eban took up his present post. Farago's source didn't even bother to check the records at the Buenos Aires airport to see when and with whom the plane took off.

In short, there is no possibility that documents containing so many inaccuracies and outright mistakes could have been prepared by Argentine intelligence the time of the Eichmann operation. If anyone wants more proof — the news agencies now report that ex-President Frondizi has come forward and denied Farago's story that he agreed to Eichmann's capture.

Mrs. Imelda Marcos, wife of the Philippines President, was visited in hospital on Saturday by her husband, extreme left, and U.S. Senator Charles Percy, center. Dr. Bob Chase whose services were made available by President Nixon. Mrs. Marcos, recovering from knife wounds inflicted by an attacker last Thursday, left hospital yesterday and is recuperating at her home.

Attacker of Mrs. Marcos identified as engineer

MANILA (UPI). — The Philippine Government yesterday officially identified the would-be assassin of Philippine first lady Imelda Marcos as a geodetic engineer who was apparently out to kill President Ferdinand Marcos.

Mrs. Marcos, 43, a former beauty queen, was discharged from the suburban Makati medical centre yesterday where she had been confined since the slashing dagger attack on Thursday.

Information Department Secretary Francisco Tatad identified the assailant as Carito Dimallig, 27, of Barrio Simaian in Batangas province, about 80 kms. southwest of Manila.

Tatad's announcement followed reports that Government agents had rounded up relatives, close friends and co-workers of the attacker. Dimallig attacked Mrs. Marcos with a dagger during a public ceremony, inflicting wounds on the first lady's hands which required from 50 to 75 stitches to close. He was killed by security men.

Selassie gives awards to jetliner crew

ADDIS ABABA (AP). — Emperor Haile Selassie has conferred decorations on the nine-member aircrew and four security guards who stopped a mid-air hijack bid over Ethiopia on Friday.

The jetliner commander, Captain Ketsela Hallu, 38, of Addis Ababa, was praised by passengers after the dramatic battle in which five men and two women were killed when they tried to seize the Ethiopian Airlines plane Boeing 720B en route to Europe.

Hallu successfully landed the plane at Bole airport here despite a hail of bullets and a grenade explosion in the passenger section. Shooting began only 13 minutes after take-off. The plane was back on the ground 12 minutes later.

The four security men were given promotions by the Emperor, as honours. They suffered bullet wounds in the fight but none was seriously injured.

For Hallu it was the second time in three years he commanded an aircraft involved with hijackers.

On September 13, 1969, his Ethiopian Airlines DC-8B with 39 passengers was hijacked to Aden on a flight from Addis Ababa to Djibouti. He had to fly the plane with a gun at his head. In Friday's drama his cockpit door was locked.

The award ceremonies were held at Jubilee Palace in Addis Ababa on Saturday.

Gossip columnist Louella Parsons dies at 91

HOLLYWOOD (AP). — Louella Parsons, the first and most famous of the Hollywood gossip columnists, died yesterday, aged 91. She died in her sleep.

Miss Parsons, for 40 years a powerful figure in the motion picture industry, had since 1962 fought off a series of ailments—pneumonia, shingles of the optic nerve, fractures of hip and shoulder, and the debilities of advanced age.

During her years as arbiter of movieland society, Miss Parsons demanded from the principals themselves first tips about stars' marriages, quarrels, divorces and love affairs.

She considered it treason if the tip went instead to arch-rival Hedda Hopper, who... Parsons' columnists in 1942. She conducted at one time a nationwide radio show, "Hollywood Hotel," instituting a trademark phrase since often mimicked by nightclub comics: "This is Louella Parsons from Hollywood. My first excitement is..."

She often attended three or four parties a night to gather her items—until she was hospitalized in April, 1962 with shingles and pneumonia. The night before she had missed her first Academy Awards programme in its then 34-year history.

As a teen-ager she was the beautiful belle of Dixon, Ill., where she wrote social notes for the local paper, "The Star." After journalistic jobs in Chicago and New York, she came to Hollywood in 1925 as the first syndicated writer. Publisher William Randolph Hearst started her at $250 a week to write for his chain of papers.

No teeth for Arab economic plan

CAIRO (AP). — The Arab League Economic Council ended its six-day conference on Saturday without taking any action on a plan "rendering the Arab economy of service in the attack against Israel."

The conference also did not reach any decision on a report by the League's Secretary-General Mahoud Riad suggesting measures to be taken by Arab Governments to reassure foreign states to side with the Arabs against Israel. The conference called on Arab Economy Ministers to submit their recommendations to the League by mid-February for discussion at the next emergency session in Kuwait March.

The conference postponed until next month a nomination of a new Secretary General for its Council to replace outgoing Abdel Monem El Anna, according to the Middle East News Agency.

Swedish Crown Prince awards Nobel prizes

STOCKHOLM (UPI). — Eight Americans, two Britons and German author Heinrich Boell yesterday received their 1972 Nobel prizes from the hands of Crown Prince Carl Gustaf of Sweden.

The 26-year-old Crown Prince, acted as a stand-in for his grandfather, King Gustaf Adolf, 90, who had a cold.

Some 3,300 guests attended the glittering ceremony in the auditorium of the St. Erik fairgrounds.

The Crown Prince handed over the Nobel insignia — medals and diplomas — and the prize cheques to the sound of trumpets after the Laureates and their work had been introduced by members of the prize awarding bodies — the Swedish Academy and the Swedish Academy of Sciences.

Ex-Sa'ka terrorist in U.S. prison after asylum bid

NEW YORK (INA). — A man who claims he is a former member of the Syrian terrorist organization known as the "Black September" is in prison (in San Antonio, Texas) waiting a decision on the U.S. government on his bid for asylum, according to the "New York Times."

The man, identified as Yusef Sa'ka, says that if he is deported to Syria, he will face certain death. "Times" said yesterday.

Yusef Sa'ka, a 30-year-old Syrian, was arrested in Arlington, near Washington, on May 24 and charged with carrying a false passport. He fled the U.S. on March 4 as a member of the name of Joseph and under a false passport, carrying $130,000 of what he said was his own money.

Sa'ka was involved in the assassination of a U.S. official on November 1968 on the ground that his would endanger national security, the "Times" said.

The Syrian government has informed the U.S. that Mr. Barbour, a former major in the Syrian army, had "illegally departed Syria with embezzled public funds which had been entrusted to him for disbursement to his military unit." Mr. Barbour said he was ordered to work with Sa'ka for one year by his military superiors after he had clashed with a Russian adviser. The Russian, he contended, asked him for military information and he refused to provide it, the newspaper said.

Barbour told the "Times" that last January, after an unsuccessful attempt to start my car in Damascus, I discovered that a bomb had been placed in it. I was quite sure that the attempted assassination was on account of my political view and my opposition to the guerrilla activities.

(Barbour insisted to the "Times" that he was opposed to the terrorist movements' activities.)

THE fog — or smokescreen — surrounding the fate of Hitler's deputy, Martin Bormann, has exercised imaginations since the number-two Nazi was last seen in May 1945, as the Russians were entering Berlin.

Some say he was killed on the spot. Others hold that he died in the Soviet Union four years ago after being granted sanctuary there for secret help he provided during World War II.

Commonest of all, however, are the reports that he managed a hair-breadth escape of the Nazi collapse and is now hiding somewhere — precisely where varies with the different reports and is never too clear.

Unfortunately, the "revelations" serialized in the London "Daily Express" last week by the Hungarian-American writer Ladislav Farago fall into this category, although they offer the incidental novelty of handing out undeserved laurels to the Argentinian for "really" locating Adolf Eichmann. For Farago seems to have bought a bill of goods from one of the fairy-tale sellers who have been so active in South America since they discovered there is a gold mine the search for Nazi war criminals.

Farago claims that his revelations are based on "top secret" reports made to Argentine ex-President Arturo Frondizi by Buenos Aires' intelligence service. These reports relate a number of key events in Bormann's post-1945 career: how he managed to smuggle a fortune into Argentina; his arrival under the name "Eliesser Goldstein," and his chance discovery in Buenos Aires in 1950 by an Italian doctor named Pino Frezza, who had known him in Germany.

On October 5 of this year, Farago's revelation continues, a man he managed to smuggle a fortune into Chile near Mendoza is supposed to have aroused a policeman's suspicion when he presented a passport bearing the name Richard Bauer. The officer remembered, Farago tells us, that two months earlier the same man had crossed on a passport bearing the name Juan Gomez.

OFF TO PARAGUAY

Jose Juan Velasco, the senior Argentine intelligence officer responsible for keeping track of the Nazis in Argentina since 1963, was immediately informed, we are told, flew straightaway to Mendoza and was convinced on the spot that Bauer-Gomez was indeed Bormann.

Unfortunately, Farago continues, while the police were awaiting an arrest order from Buenos Aires, the suspect managed to disappear in the direction of Paraguay inside a big Chevrolet. Velasco had the same bad luck in 1963, when he raided Bormann's suspected Buenos Aires hiding place only to find his man had fled. Nevertheless, the Mendoza incident had not been totally fruitless: the police had managed to photograph Bauer-Gomez-Bormann from several angles while he was standing in front of Velasco.

Why Velasco — especially if he is a senior intelligence official — demanded from the principals themselves first tips about stars' marriages, quarrels, divorces and love affairs.

She considered it treason if the tip went instead to arch-rival Hedda Hopper, who... Parsons' columnists in 1942. She conducted at one time a nationwide radio show, "Hollywood Hotel," instituting a trademark phrase since often mimicked by nightclub comics: "This is Louella Parsons from Hollywood. My first excitement is..."

She often attended three or four parties a night to gather her items—until she was hospitalized in April, 1962 with shingles and pneumonia. The night before she had missed her first Academy Awards programme in its then 34-year history.

As a teen-ager she was the beautiful belle of Dixon, Ill., where she wrote social notes for the local paper, "The Star." After journalistic jobs in Chicago and New York, she came to Hollywood in 1925 as the first syndicated writer. Publisher William Randolph Hearst started her at $250 a week to write for his chain of papers.

Peasant farmer Johan Erhman, focus of another Bormann "expose" earlier this year when he was wrongly identified as the Nazi leader by the Columbia Journal "Cromos."

should need special permission to arrest his quarry after at long last seeing him face-to-face is one secret Farago does not reveal to us. Nor does he say why Velasco let "Bormann" go. But if this borders on the unbelievable, then so do many other parts of Farago's serialized tale. Let's look at a few of the most arresting of these.

No one the least bit familiar with the subject needs to make a deep study to discover that Farago's "top-secret Argentine intelligence documents" contain reports published years ago and available in the public library. These reports have never been verified, nor have they ever helped anyone get a real whiff of Bormann.

BUNDLE OF SECRETS

An example: back in 1952, anti-Peronist Silvano Santander, then in the Argentine Parliament, acquired a bundle of "secret papers" while on a visit to Berlin (whether East Berlin or West Berlin is not clear). The papers dealt with the part played by Juan and Evita Peron, and Martin Bormann, in smuggling a huge Nazi treasure into Argentina.

The Peron papers were circulated from hand to hand, but in 1955, after his fall, they appeared as a book. Farago could thus have saved himself part of much trouble by looking in his local library or bookstore. And even if he never heard of the Santander papers, he must surely have read (in fact, I think he reviewed it) Michael Bar-Zohar's "The Avengers," which was published in English in 1968. Farago could have found in Bar-Zohar's book a summary of the Santander Papers, plus (among other things) the names "Eliesser Goldstein" and "Juan Gomez," thus avoiding having to wait till now to reveal all this information as a closely guarded secret of Argentine intelligence.

Although Farago is usually presented as a former intelligence officer himself, he seems to have swallowed the "documents" that were given — or sold — him whole, without bothering to check out their accuracy.

Farago also seems to have failed to compare the Velasco photographs with pictures taken when the Nazi leader was riding high.

Nevertheless, though it is true that an ordinary eye is hard put to see any resemblance, to remove all possible doubt we turned the job over to the same expert who successfully identified Eichmann's photographs made early in 1960 to the same task force that captured the mastermind of the Final Solution in April of that year. (That identification played a major role in causing the order for the operation to be given.)

Here is the expert's report: "The overall structure of the skull does not match. The angle of the ear does not correspond, and neither do the folds in the ear-structure. Although the suspect and the wanted man show some facial traits in common, their muscle structure and facial folds are different."

His conclusion: "I did not find that the suspect and the wanted man are the same."

In the light of all this, it would unfortunately seem that Ladislav Farago has not, after all, discovered Martin Bormann. This should not discourage him from keeping up the search, and we shall all hail him if he succeeds. But to do so he will have to come up with sources more reliable than those that seem to have been his lot so far.

An example of what the latter provided is the "secret dossier," which he has included in his Bormann revelations in order to let the world know how Adolf Eichmann was really captured.

"The Eichmann dossier," Farago writes, "now in my possession, extracted from the most secret files of Argentinian intelligence, conclusively proves that it was the Argentinian authorities, and, in particular, a team of six security officers, to whom the credit must go for this spectacular achievement. The four Israeli Commandos of the 'Z Team' (named after its leader, a middle-aged man calling himself 'Zimmerman'), whether they knew it or not, were merely the actors in a pre-arranged charade played on a stage upon which the curtain has never been raised."

Farago then proceeds to raise the curtain and name the six Argentine worthies, hastening to add that the real hero was the South American country's then-President Arturo Frondizi, under whose "express orders" the six were acting.

In the course of describing this "dossier," Farago relates how Argentine intelligence detected the presence of Israeli commandos back in 1957, "but on orders received from higher quarters... refrained from acting against them except to keep the situation under control."

This really began to move with Frondizi's election to the presidency, he continues. One of Frondizi's first acts was to put Eichmann under strict surveillance, with a view towards "an early disposition of the case." He offered Eichmann to the West Germans for prosecution, but they refused the offer. A senior official in the Bonn government, Dr. Fritz Bauer, leaked news of this to someone close to Israeli Premier David Ben-Gurion.

"It just be clear," Farago assures us, "as subsequent events will show, that President Frondizi and David Ben-Gurion acted in a secret pact somewhat after the manner in which Ben-Gurion had arranged the 1956 Suez venture in collusion with the British and French authorities."

This brought to Argentina the "Blue Falcons" — a team of four hand-picked Israeli security agents, headed by a man identified in the Argentinian papers as Yehuda Shimoni (sic), all of whom checked into the "luxurious Alvear Palace Hotel." Frondizi ordered his security services to follow the Israelis but not (to) interfere with their activities.

In Farago's "dossier," one of the six Argentine agents benevolently watching over the four Israelis reported that his charges were making themselves too conspicuous, and that it had become necessary to "shield" them to prevent Eichmann from discovering the plans being made for him. Another agent even witnessed the capture itself, watching as the four Israelis leaped out from a car with which they had been tailing Eichmann, seized the Nazi, and bundled him inside.

The agent "... jumped on a motor-cycle parked at a pre-arranged spot... and followed the kidnapers to a farm in the locality of Provenzo Varela."

When the time came to remove Eichmann from Argentina, an Argentine intelligence officer made it easier for the Israeli commandos to enter the airport with their quarry and board their El Al flight for Israel — which took off at 5:52 p.m. on May 29, 1960. On board as well were "Foreign Minister Abba Eban" and Chief Meir Zorea. The strain in Israeli-Argentine relations after the capture — expressed in such things as the expulsion of the Israeli Ambassador and an Argentinian com-demanded from the principals themselves first tips about stars' marriages, quarrels, divorces and love affairs.

She considered it treason if the tip went instead to arch-rival Hedda Hopper, who... Parsons' columnists in 1942. THE COUNTRY CLUB HOTEL

AN INNOVATION IN TOURISM IN ISRAEL

The COUNTRY CLUB HOTEL, a project involving the investment of some LL13 million, was officially inaugurated in Tel Aviv last week, thus pioneering tourist facilities in the north of the city. The hotel consists of 208 rooms housed in double-story buildings in the grounds of the Tel Aviv Country Club. The rooms can be arranged to form 72 flats, and provide accommodation for some 400 tourists.
 Adjacent to the living quarters is a central building comprising the office and reception hall of the hotel, and a commercial centre, which includes a mini-market, a post office, a bank, souvenir shop, travel agency, etc.
 There is also a three-story building specially designed for conventions, with a hall for 600 people, a restaurant, and a self-service cafeteria.
 In addition to the unique buildings, the major innovation introduced by the hotel is the making available to hotel guests, at no additional charge, the various facilities of the Tel Aviv

Country Club — the olympic size swimming pool, flood-lit tennis courts, sauna baths, gymnasiums, and other facilities.
 The hotel is surrounded by some 7 acres of lawns, and is within easy reach of the Country Club beach.

The owners of the hotel — Country Investors Ltd., a foreign company registered in Israel — believe that the tranquil location of the hotel, coupled with the proximity to the city, will result in many tourists extending their stay in Israel in order to combine touring with a real holiday.

At the festive reception marking the opening of the hotel, in the presence of the Minister of Tourism, Mr. Moshe Kol, and the Mayor of Tel Aviv, Mr. Yehoshua Rabinowitz, representatives of the investment company stated that it was their intention to complete their original programme, by building a third stage to the project — a multi-story hotel alongside the club and the present hotel.

Lots of gripes but no action on Technion food

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA — The food in the students' canteen at the Technion is like the weather — everybody talks about it, but nobody does anything about it. That is the conclusion reached after the director of the canteen offered to "carry out immediately" any "reasonable" menu the students could come up with to put some variety into the meals.

The latest issue of "Epsilon," the Student Union magazine, made the call to "amateur cooks" among the students on its front page. It noted that, "in response to the many complaints on the poor variety of meals in the canteen, the director has informed us that he is ready to accept any reasonable suggestion for different menus from any student fancying himself a gourmet."

Yesterday the acting manager of the canteen told The Post that no suggestions had been received. He added that he considered the menus at the canteen nourishing and quite varied, "considering our budgetary limits." He noted that the hot meals cost only IL1.50 or IL3.10 each and that a choice of different menus is offered every day.

Meanwhile the management has asked the Student Union to provide it with a number of students willing to help out in the canteen at lunch-time. It offered to pay IL10.05 plus "a good meal" for three hours' work. This offer was taken up.

TOTAL NOW IL35,620 Foreign donations arrive for J.P. Toy Fund

The list of contributors to The Jerusalem Post Toy Fund that appears today is almost entirely made up of old overseas friends, whose letters took a long time getting here. Their contributions totalled IL3,168.40, which brings the sum raised so far up to IL35,620.60.

The Toy Fund still has a long list of projects, most of them waiting till we see the final sum raised in this, our 24th, drive. Planning is held up until we have the answer this time.

While it is never too late, we would be grateful if all would-be contributors would get their gifts to us as quickly as possible.

We have made it easy now — just send your contributions straight to: The Jerusalem Post Toy Fund, P.O.B. 81, Jerusalem. Thanks for helping.

Pilot survives 31 days in the Arctic

YELLOWKNIFE, Northwest Territories (UPI). — A 47-year-old bush pilot who survived 31 days in the sub-zero Arctic wastelands was rescued on Saturday in "excellent" condition. Three other persons including a British nurse, died during the ordeal.

Martin Hartwell, a pilot with two years flying experience in the North, was found on Saturday morning, waving a red flare beside the wreckage of his own twin-engine Beechcraft.

He was flown 320 kms. to Stanton Yellowknife hospital where officials released a statement describing his condition as "excellent" considering his ordeal. He suffered fractures of both ankles and his left knee and is now resting quietly, a spokesman said.

SURVIVAL PACK

The plane was equipped with a survival pack, including enough food to last five people six days.

The hospital statement said Hartwell augmented the plane's food supply by eating lichens, drinking glucose from the nurse's supply kit and melting snow for drinking water. Officials said the bodies were still aboard the aircraft.

Hartwell's plane was on a mercy flight from Cambridge Bay, north of the Arctic Circle, to Yellowknife Hospital when it disappeared on November 8. Aboard the plane were Hartwell, a British nurse, Judy Hill, 27, Nemea Mullroyak, an Eskimo woman with labour complications, and David Kootook, 14, an Eskimo suffering from appendicitis.

Operas: One silly, one exciting

The Israel Philharmonic Orchestra, Subscription concert No. 2, Conductor: Alberto Zedda, (Tel Aviv, December 5). Two one-act comic operas Donizetti: Rita on Le Mari Barba; Puccini: Gianni Schicchi.

It must be rather unpleasant for opera singers to perform with a huge symphony orchestra exposed at the same level on stage, instead of having it safely confined to the pit. Alberto Zedda, however, showed such excellent craftsmanship, treating his singers so sensitively that the singing was not impaired in the slightest.

Despite this remarkable achievement, which allowed all the singers to project their voices easily, only the second part of the evening, featuring Puccini's exciting one-act opera, was of interest. Donizetti's "Rita" is the silliest and most trivial piece imaginable. One could perhaps have enjoyed the singing alone, had it been outstanding. But only one singer soprano, Emilia Ravaglia as Rita, gave us full pleasure.

"Gianni Schicchi" is a different class of opera altogether. It combines the frighteningly morbid with a unique sense of comedy. Although Puccini occasionally indulges in sugary sentimentality, this work meets the intellectual demands of the modern listener.

However "Schicchi" should be sung and acted by a team — and this team was not completely homogeneous. The singing of Rena Samsonov, Israel Eshkin and Eduardo Gimenez, to mention only three, differed considerably in style and timbre, but here again Zedda's experience helped somewhat to overcome the difficulty. Although the performance was not as exciting as "Schicchi" could be, it was stimulating enough to capture our imagination.

Easy win for Shostakovich

The Israel Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra; Gary Bertini, conductor; Eadu Aldesescu, cello (broadcast from Bin-Yonah, Jerusalem, December 8). Handel: Royal Fireworks; Dvorak: Cello Concerto, opus 104; Shostakovich: Symphony No. 1, opus 10.

The opening suite sounded peculiarly stiff and uninspired. Fortunately, the Dvorak amended this.

Russian library opens in Tel Aviv

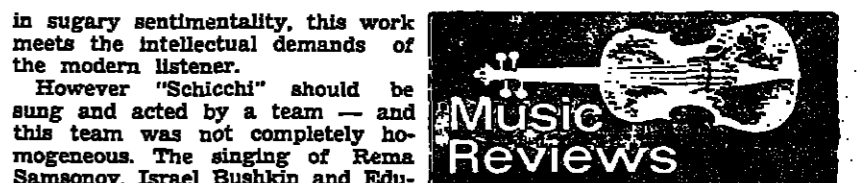

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Russian immigrants who have been hard put to find books in their native tongue now have a library of their own. It was inaugurated last week at 67 Rehov Hayarkon.

The library includes over 20,000 books, among them masterpieces by Alexander Solzhenitsyn, Ossip Mandelstam, Boris Pasternak and Anatole Kunetzov. The library also has sections on scientific and technological literature, as well as on psychology, social sciences, history and geography.

Books from the library will also be sent out to libraries in all 50 chapters of the Association of Immigrants from the U.S.S.R. and to 20 immigrant absorption centres around the country.

The library will be open daily during the morning and the afternoon hours. Library staff say they will be happy to receive more contributions of books, not necessarily in Russian.

The interpretation of the piece was particularly good in his handling of the solo part in the Cello Concerto. The interpretation of the peace was firm and lively and the technical side of the performance was absolutely faultless. The orchestra's part was also satisfying and so the presentation answered all demands.

The eclecticism of Shostakovich's First Symphony can be excused by the fact that he wrote the work at the age of 19. The transparent, chamber-music-like texture was well preserved in this performance, and the various wind-instruments came out well with their soloistic contributions. Gary Bertini directed this reading with all the knowledge and power at his disposal, and the over-performed, over-rated composer could notch up another popular success.

150 exhibit for Ilan and Alyn

Special to The Jerusalem Post

Works by 150 Israeli artists go on a special one-day show at Beit Hanaassi this evening for sale on behalf of Ilan and Alyn, the two organizations responsible for the care and the rehabilitation of the handicapped. Many of the paintings, lithographs, woodcarvings and sculptures have been donated by the artists.

This is the first time that Beit Hanaassi has lent its premises for such an event. "By holding the exhibition at the President's residence, we were restricted in the number of people we could invite," says Mrs. Tamar Kollek, wife of Jerusalem's Mayor and Chairman of Ilan. "But Beit Hanaassi has always been in the forefront in giving support to charitable institutions."

This evening's exhibition is the first joint fund-raising event by Ilan and Alyn. The two function as separate organizations, though their work for the handicapped is complementary. Alyn, in Jerusalem, is the only orthopaedic hospital in the country, and provides medical care, education and rehabilitation facilities for seriously handicapped children. Ilan — the roof organization for the rehabilitation of the handicapped — provides schooling, recreation and transport for Jerusalem's handicapped. Their latest project, a large, well-equipped sports centre, is now being planned and will open in Kiryat Yovel, near the Alyn hospital.

Both organizations provide care for post-polio cases, children with crippling birth defects and those suffering from muscular dystrophy and, in recent years, youngsters handicapped for life as a result of motorcar accidents. Ilan also arranges scholarships for higher studies, as well as loans for housing and cars. Their funds — like the facilities at Alyn — are also available to Arab youth, including those from the administered areas.

Belgian Catholic choir to sing here during Christmas

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — The 90 member Cantate Domino choir of Aalst, Belgium, will come here for an eight-day Christmas pilgrimage on December 22. Archbishop Joseph Raya told The Post. The Catholic singers are Flemish-speaking. They are scheduled to give concerts in Bethlehem, Nazareth and possibly Tel Aviv.

He said that he had arranged for the choir's visit during a visit to Belgium earlier this year, and the government tendered an official invitation for the tour, which will be under the patronage of the Belgian government.

The Archbishop said that the Knights of St. Lazarus, an order originating in Crusader Acre, will probably hold their annual convention in Nazareth next September, at his invitation. As Archbishop of Acre, he is the Supreme Master of the order, which numbers some 3,000 members, in Europe. He expected the Israel-convention to be "the biggest yet" with 600 members due to attend.

BANK SECRECY FAR FROM TOTAL

HOW secret are bank secrets in Israel? It is not easy to answer this simple question, but one thing is clear - it is far from total. Most citizens do not like other people or the authorities to know too many details about their financial affairs.

numbered accounts. This keeps the identity of an account holder a secret even from the bank's own staff. What does this kind of secrecy amount to? Have all these precautions any real value? No bank, of course, will of its own volition supply information about the accounts of its customers to third parties; but much could still be done, by improving simple techniques, to ensure that accidents do not happen. The sloppy practice of sending statements in badly sealed envelopes or worse in envelopes closed with a staple, makes it all too easy for a curious apartment-house tenant to take a peek at a neighbour's account. This annoyance, which is more important than is usually assumed, could easily be prevented.

of a safe, are blocked and only put at the disposal of the executor and, in due course, of the heirs, if proper approval of the court has been obtained. This is done only after inheritance tax has been assessed and paid, which involves full disclosure of all the monies and securities held by the bank to the relevant department of the Finance Ministry. Ultimately, therefore, the authorities are fully informed. Last but not least, Israeli judges do not recognize the existence of bank secrecy. A parent may defy the court by keeping his bank tightly closed. A bank manager may not. He must answer all questions put to him in court, including those concerning customers' accounts. Refusal to do so is treated as contempt of court.

Five-year backlog in registering homes

Jerusalem Post Reporter HAIFA. — About 250,000 homeowners in development areas are waiting for their homes to be included in the Land Registry (shbu). By the time the State Lands Authority will have caught up with this backlog, at least five years, the number dealt with will have grown to 850,000, the head of the Authority, Aluf (Res.) Meir Zorea has declared. Speaking as the guest of the Social and Economic Club at the Shulamit Hotel here last week, he explained that "sixty steps are needed to complete this recording process for each home, and it will cost the country about IL30m. to do it all...we are now engaged in this work and are looking for ways of speeding it up, but when exactly we'll finish it I don't know." Most of the homes were built by the Housing Ministry on State-owned land.

the Tel Aviv area, because it had very few reserves there and the demand for housing and plots to build on were far in excess of them. In the Haifa area the Authority had somewhat greater reserves, but these were largely in areas not yet parcelled and not yet covered by building schemes. Transforming agricultural land into building land was a formidable process and all the same people were buying land in the hope of making a good investment. Land owned by the State was meant to serve the development of the country, not speculation. He regretted that the Government's decision on population dispersal, especially settlement in the Negev and Galilee, was no longer being carried out with vigour, and too many immigrants and young couples today wanted to settle in the urban centres where land was expensive. The Lands Authority was providing the Housing Ministry with low-cost building sites to house immigrants and young couples, and the Ministry in turn turned over the land to building contractors for IL1,000 to IL2,000 per home, depending on location. Aluf Zorea admitted that the orientation of the Authority's staff of 500 had hitherto been largely agricultural, it would now shift to a more urban outlook. This would call for a major effort, especially in the domain of urban planning. Settlement of newcomers and young couples was planned and coordinated between Government offices to some extent "as the work is going on," but "I realize that this planning effort will have to be put on a computer to achieve a far-reaching, coordinated settlement programme.

Histadrut budget up by IL10m.

Jerusalem Post Reporter TEL AVIV. — The Histadrut Executive budget for 1973 was set by the Central Committee on Friday at IL84.3m., an increase of nearly IL10m. over this year. Final approval awaits an Executive meeting on December 24. Histadrut Treasurer Yehoshua Levy explained that the wage bill will rise by 16 to 20 per cent following increases in salaries themselves, as well as in the cost-of-living allowance. Membership fees, the mainstay of Histadrut income, will not change, "although the freeze is an obvious injustice," Mr. Levy said. The budget does not include provision for the Histadrut elections, due to take place next summer.

Auto growth 'to continue'

DETROIT (AP). — Using a record sales year as a background, Ford Motor Co.'s two top executives predict the economic record of the U.S. next year will continue to improve, but they warn 1973 will be a year "of crucial decisions." In their year-end statement, Board Chairman Henry Ford II and Ford President Lee A. Iacocca said Sunday they expect this year's record growth in the auto industry to continue next year, spurring a continued economic recovery. Ford and Iacocca, citing a 20 per cent increase in profits for the first three quarters of 1972, said 5.6 million autos will be sold by the company this year, a 15 per cent increase over last year. In the U.S., the report said, car sales will reach a new high of 2.7 million vehicles, 13 per cent above last year's sales. And, the Ford executives said, their company would capture 25 per cent of the domestic car market this year, up from 23.8 per cent last year. In foreign business, the executives said, sales will exceed 1.6 million units, up 13 per cent from last year. Sales increased 15 per cent in Canada, 14 per cent in Europe, 22 per cent in Brazil and 20 per cent in Australia. Foreign truck sales climbed 22 per cent, they said. The Ford executives say they see "no sign of a slowing in economic recovery" in the U.S. and that they expect the gross national product to show a real "gain" of about 6 per cent next year. They expect free world car production to increase about 8 per cent, as it did this year.

'Boycott Pepsi' call after Soviet deal

WASHINGTON (UPI). — A group of organizations concerned with the treatment of Jews in the Soviet Union called yesterday for a boycott of PepsiCo Inc. because the firm recently signed a trade agreement with the Soviet Union. The Union of Councils for Soviet Jews said the boycott against Pepsi Cola and other products of the firm was designed to convince both Americans and Soviets that Russian limitation on emigration of Soviet Jews would be unprofitable. Under the Soviet Union-PepsiCo Inc. agreement, Pepsi Cola will be sold in the Soviet Union and Soviet alcoholic beverages will be distributed in the U.S. through a PepsiCo subsidiary, Monster Henri Wines.

NEW YORK (AP). — The former Mrs. Henry Ford II said she is living a simpler life since she became Mrs. Deane Johnson of Bel Air, California, so on Saturday she sold off some of her old furniture, rugs and dishes. In doing so, she collected a world auction record of $2,908,450 at the Sotheby Parke-Bernet Galleries. Top price went for a console table made for Queen Marie Antoinette and delivered to her at Versailles by cabinetmaker Jean-Francois Riesener in 1788. The table brought $400,000 from the Antique Porcelain Co. of New York. A trimmed flat desk that used to belong to Queen Victoria brought $100,000. Mrs. Johnson also did well with her old rugs. A Louis XIV Savonnerie brought $150,000. In the china department, a pair of 18th century Meissen vases, dated 1747-49, brought $85,000 dollars. The only reason given by Mrs. Johnson for the disposal of the treasures, a gallery spokesman said, was "we want to simplify our life-style."

A TIMELY TOURISM LAW

AS Israel prepares for the biggest tourist influx in its history, on the occasion of the State's 25th anniversary celebrations, the Minister of Tourism today tables in the Knesset a much-needed law on tourist services.

One of the fastest growing industries in Israel, tourism has earned some $225m. from almost 750,000 visitors in the course of 1972, an increase over last year of about 25 per cent despite the slow-down in July and August. In addition to its important economic benefits, this sector has also done much to create good-will for Israel.

But it is no secret that the growth in the number of overseas visitors has brought with it a marked rise in the number of complaints on the standards and services of some hotels, restaurants, travel agencies, guides and transport companies. Reports of malpractice have become too frequent. Until now, it was almost impossible to deal effectively with most of them for lack of appropriate legal machinery. Tourism has been governed by a series of Mandatory Ordinances and Israeli regulations which lack teeth and whose enforcement is a long and costly procedure.

Israel is now competing for tourists with the most sophisticated and experienced countries of Europe and the Mediterranean. The attraction of religious sites and the special atmosphere and spirit of this country cannot be made to compensate for overcharging and a purely commercial attitude towards visitors.

The majority of those involved in the tourist trade are a credit to their profession and to the country. But a small minority has, on occasion, given Israel a bad name among disappointed tourists. It is against those who break the rules, and in order to protect the reputation of the majority, that the Ministry of Tourism has finally put together the ordinances and regulations governing tourist services.

Under the guidance of Minister Moshe Kol much thought has gone into the bill. It has been carefully drafted by a team of Ministry specialists with the advice of hoteliers, restaurant owners, travel agents and guides. It will provide a set of rules for the various services, determine the professional qualifications of those engaged in them, insist on proper display of prices and establish machinery to investigate complaints and punish those found guilty. The creation of various advisory committees proposed in the law, will insure the cooperation of the tourist industry in its implementation.

With one million tourists expected in 1973, Knesset Members, who have been demanding such legislation since the creation of the Tourism Ministry in 1964, would be wise to act upon the law quickly.

Recognition of Saigon

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: It is difficult for me to understand why Israel has chosen this precise moment to establish diplomatic relations with the government of South Vietnam. While it is true that diplomatic recognition does not imply approval of a particular regime, and while it is also true that every nation should strive to increase its formal international contacts, we feel that there are special considerations regarding South Vietnam that warrant a more prudent approach. Vietnam is still in the throes of one of the most violent civil wars in world history. And of the two contestants, it is the South, the government we are recognizing, whose continued existence as a viable entity is most questionable. Massive foreign intervention has propped up dictatorial military governments in South Vietnam for more than a decade. Even the United States, who originally got involved in Vietnam under the mistaken notion that it was containing Chinese Communism, has decided to let the Vietnamese settle their own fate.

The Government of South Vietnam has, over the years, sought the recognition of the Government of Israel. The recognition was not extended. What happened to justify this change in Israel's policy? Is this the right time for us to take sides and to choose the side which is less associated with the mainstream of Vietnamese nationalism as it has developed for the last 30 years?

It is regrettable that North Vietnam refuses to establish diplomatic relations with Israel, but there is no denying the fact that Vietnamese Communism is an indigenous force, closely identified with the historic development of Vietnamese nationalism. Why should we further antagonize this nationalist movement by supporting the unpopular government of the South even before hostilities have been concluded?

If there are indeed political considerations that arrange the establishment of diplomatic relations at this time, the public deserves to be informed. If not, the move is most assuredly ill-timed. It may also cost Israel international goodwill, as support for American involvement on behalf of the southern regime has been consistently waning.

Surely considerations such as these should have dictated a continuation of Israel's former policy of neutrality in the Vietnamese conflict. This conflict has never concerned us in the past. Why get involved now, especially with a southern regime, about which an increasing number of nations have grown doubtful?

Different view of hash

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Alex Beryne's article "Hashish: Clearing the smoke" (December 5), did not clear the smoke. It made the air more cloudy in a country that is already misinformed about drugs and prejudiced against the American subculture. Most of the "evidence" cited was vague and unsubstantiated. The only "concrete" evidence given were studies done in 1949 and 1965. We are well into the 'seventies now and many opinions on this subject have changed since then.

The writer argues that we should not legislate more vice into society than those that are already there (i.e. tobacco, alcohol). Through experience, governments have already proven to themselves that they cannot legislate morality. The best thing that they can do is to inform the public about what is dangerous and what is not.

A point totally ignored in the article is that the current rise in drug addiction in America is symptomatic. It is a symbol of disenchantment. It is a registration of protest against the military-industrial complex. Drug addiction among the G.I.s in Vietnam is a prime example.

A person who goes on to addictive drugs after trying hash and marijuana goes there on his own initiative because of serious personal problems. Hundreds of thousands of students, young people, and not-so-young people in America who have tried light drugs and have steered clear of heavy drugs will attest to this.

SPORTS FACILITIES IN JERUSALEM

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: The lack of modern sports facilities in the capital of Israel is surely obvious. We attended a soccer game at the Y.M.C.A. We entered at 1:30 p.m. When we attempted to leave, we were amazed to find all gates locked and were told that we could not leave before the game was over at 4 p.m. There were no toilet facilities, and spectators urinated against the walls. It was not a pleasant night, and we felt like prisoners held against our will.

ISRAEL PRESS

Jews as extremists

Editorials discussing the recently discovered espionage network concentrate on the fact that this is the first time that Jews are also involved, albeit as suspects only, at this stage, in terrorist activity.

Ha'aretz (non-party) writes: "Jews have also been attracted by extremist political movements. But this does not lessen the shock. The further fact that it is fashionable in this era for rebellious youth to join the enemy is also no comfort. Uncovering of the network is important not only from the security point of view, but also in order to discover the background and circumstances under which it succeeded in netting a number of young Jews in Israel."

She'arim (Poalei Agudat Yisrael) states: "The espionage network is a continuation of the path followed by the extreme Jewish left among the Jewish community in this country ever since the 'twenties. The public background feeding Jewish terrorism is undoubtedly Mapam, in whose kibbutzim leftist groups flourish. Parts of them serve Arab terrorism among the Jewish community, and also support its propaganda and espionage in Europe. The Jewish public will look upon the leaders of Mapam as providing the background and the basic reasons for the deterioration of Jewish Youth."

Al Hanihshmar (Mapam) comments on the U.N. General Assembly resolution on the Middle East: "The resolution is cause for concern because it is hostile to Israel, and the reaction of Israeli circles at the U.N. — who rushed to voice their satisfaction — is thus surprising. The motion stressed Israel's isolation, with only seven countries voting against the resolution. At the same time, Egypt's rejoicing also seems exaggerated, since the vague wording of the resolution will provide Egypt with no real profit, and will certainly not help resolve the Middle East conflict."

Hamaadia (Agudat Yisrael) writes: "Israel's threat to disavow its commitment to Resolution 242 has achieved its purpose. The 1967 resolution retains its fundamental status, and Israel no longer has any justification to sever itself from it. Furthermore, the version of the resolution adopted by the Assembly is better for Israel than any other version, and this is also the opinion of countries friendly to Israel."

NEW Jewish Art and Civilization ed. GEOFFREY WIGODER BROWN'S ISRAEL'S QUALITY BOOKSHOPS 35, ALLENBY, TEL-AVIV 48 MAHAT BENJAMIN, TEL-AVIV 9, SHLOMZION HAMALKA, JERUSALEM

FOREIGN PRESS The Sunday Times, of London says: "The Israeli spokesman has described the U.N. resolution as 'spurious' — a curious word to use about an expression of world opinion which only seven governments — including Israel herself — opposed. It is useless for Jerusalem to rail at the British or any other government which supported the resolution for being 'pro-Arab.' The truth is that Israel's policy of creating faits accomplis in the occupied territories stands generally condemned."

APPEAL FOR GOLAN SETTLERS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Volunteers have helped us considerably in the confusion following the shelling which we suffered last week and we are grateful for both the physical help and the favourable publicity which we have received.

The real need, however, is for people who want to settle and build on the foothold that exists in the Golan. We are a community which includes a number of immigrants and are interested in the absorption of other young people (we also have facilities for children up to grade 4) in our group.

Basically the community is Hebrew speaking and an immigrant who is completely absorbed here will feel a true Israeli. Where are these people? We would be happy to meet them.

AMIN'S FAVOURITE WITCHDOCTOR

New evidence from Uganda suggests that President Idi Amin is being "guided" by a Ghanaian spiritualist. In this exclusive story, FWF correspondent SAM UBA reveals the name of the "witchdoctor" and adds that although the President's peasant cunning and intelligence may see him through, the omens are not bright.

LONDON. — When President Idi Amin announced his decision to expel non-citizen Asians he said he was following an instruction God had given to him in a vision. New evidence from Kampala suggests that Amin never had a dream. According to well-informed Ugandan Africans the "god" he has been seeing is a Ghanaian spiritualist, the Reverend John Obiri Yeboka. Better known as "Prophet John" or "Evangelist John," the Rev Yeboka is the founder of the Redeemed Church of Uganda, which claims 50,000 adherents, but in recent months he has become Amin's closest friend and confidant.

Unofficially, he is described as "the President's spiritual adviser," but the Ugandans see him as the evil influence behind their leader. They say that until the prophet came into his life, Amin was behaving rationally and acted only on the advice of his top civil servants and members of the judiciary, including Mr. Benedicto Kiwanuka, the Chief Justice who has "disappeared" since September and is now presumed dead.

The close relationship between Amin and the "prophet" was first made public early in September when Uganda Radio gave an unusually lengthy account of a luncheon the President had given in his home at State House, Kampala. According to the Uganda Radio broadcast, the prophet told Amin that his decision to expel the Asians had the support of people throughout the world and predicted that soon other African states would follow his example. He also assured Amin that attempts to kill him would fail and that Uganda's future was "very bright economically."

TO BULE 20 YEARS On another occasion the prophet assured Amin that he would rule for 20 years and advised him not to travel outside the country until all the expelled Asians had departed. As his reward, Amin made him a citizen of Uganda.

Prophet John is a remarkable man and has had extraordinary success with African heads of state. He was a constant of President Sekou Touré of Guinea and the late President Nkrumah of Ghana. He was also a regular visitor to the homes of the late President Tubman of Liberia and the deposed President Modibo Keita of Mali. He is well known to both President Nyerere of Tanzania and Dr. Obote whom Amin deposed in January, 1971. A head of state falling under the spell of a spiritualist or religious leader is not uncommon in Africa. Juju-men, witchdoctors, soothsayers and fortune-tellers are potent influences in the lives of most African politicians, military leaders, intellectuals and academics. I am no exception. Although I do not practise juju or witchcraft, I do not believe that they are bunk; on the contrary I respect and fear them. Practically every head of state in Africa is believed to have powerful juju-men and witchdoctors who protect him. Dr. Kaunda of Zambia is the only African statesman I have not heard associated with juju or witchcraft, although they are widely practised in his country. It was an open secret in Accra that Dr. Nkrumah had three witchdoctors and "a big juju-man" whom he consulted before he did anything. One was a woman in her 30s. She was installed in Flag Staff House, Nkrumah's official residence. She inspected all food before Nkrumah touched it, and also arranged his bed, for she alone decided in which room he would sleep after she had consulted the oracle. Although most informed Ghanaians knew Nkrumah's witchdoctors, no one, not even his bitterest political enemies, dared to disclose their names to inquiring foreigners. Members of the military junta, which toppled Nkrumah in 1966, told incredible stories about Nkrumah's faith in witchdoctors and juju-men but never once mentioned the names of these mysterious creatures who had helped to make the "Osoyefo" a demi-god of his people.

OBONES IN THE PALACE Sekou Touré's witchdoctors are all very elderly women. Like Nkrumah he installed one permanently in his official residence and often visitors have been led to believe that they were his mother. Dr. Obote was known to have retained the services of six of the most powerful witchdoctors in East Africa.

According to Ugandan sources, the witchdoctors played the decisive role in his victory over King Freddie in the battle of Mmenko Hill. It is said that Obote decided to attack the Kabaka's palace only after the six witchdoctors had assured him of their total support and loyalty. King Freddie himself is said to have decided to leave Uganda for Britain on the advice of his own witchdoctors.

That juju and witchcraft played very important parts in the lives of Nigeria's former political leaders was conclusively revealed in 1965 when the government of the Mid-west Region appointed a judicial commission to investigate the activities of the Owegebe Cult. At the head of the cult was Chief Omo Osoyefo, deputy Premier of the region, and highest ranking spiritual leader of the Binis whose principal city, Benin, was famous as the "city of blood."

The commission was headed by a British-born judge of the High Court, Sir Dufus Alexander, and its report published in 1966 makes the most striking reading. Sir Dufus found that juju and witchcraft were widely practised by the ordinary folk as well as by cabinet ministers, and that it was a potent political weapon. The simple explanation for this African attachment to the supernatural is that logic and reason are not the foundation of African beliefs. In spite of centuries of contact with Christianity and Western civilization, the necessity to propitiate the powers that operate outside the sphere of human contact remains the dominant feature of African life. Amin's relationship with Prophet John is in keeping with the tradition established by his more respectable predecessors. What is worrying to the Ugandans is that the national leaders who have entrusted their fate to spiritual advisers have always paid for it. Perhaps Amin's peasant cunning and intelligence will see him through. But the omens are not bright.

IN DEFENCE OF THE TIGER

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — I wish to refer to your report "Boy wins damages for scratches by underfed tiger" (December 3). As a man with more than 40 years' experience in handling and training wild animals, especially lions, tigers and leopards, I object to the words: "The cubs had been negligent in not treating its animal better." What should the animals do? Lick the face of their tormentor like docile dogs in our profession, it is a well known fact that every animal will defend his living space and an outsider has to be very careful not to intrude into this space and remain a certain distance from the animal. The boy touched even the hair, so who is to blame. These animals know only the trainer and will obey him.

Furthermore, it is a rule to feed circus animals only after their performance, otherwise they will starve. The word "underfed" does not impress me, as you cannot compare animals in a zoo, who have little space to move around, down the length of the time and a overfed, with animals who work, and jump.

JONNY SUCHIER, Inspector (ret.) of the Zoological Garden, Tel Aviv, December 4.

WRONG PARTY

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — In your report, "Ecologists look into E'sheba corals" (November 28), you state that the Chairman of the Knesset Ecological Committee, Mr. Josef Tzur, is a member of the Likud Party. May I draw your attention to the fact that M.K. Josef Tzur is a member of Gahal.
